New arrangements for the Parish from October during the Transition

At our recent PCC meeting consideration was given to arrangements for the parish from October. Please note the pattern of services is changing and we have put in place contacts for each congregation so that if they have questions they will know whom to contact. This will hopefully prevent general emails to all and sundry which often lead to confusion. The contact list is below; each contact can then if necessary bring the question to the Leadership Group (Paul Gribble, Matt Frost, Richard Laugharne, David Watters and Margaret S-Thorne) who may wish to put it on the PCC agenda. Hopefully for most matters only a simple answer is required which can rapidly be dealt with.

Michael's Message

Dear Friends,

I was reminded recently of the song "What a wonderful world", and what struck me was the line "The dark sacred night." We can all relate to "The bright blessed day" but the dark night being sacred is not a usual reflection. More commonly it is associated with nightmares and fear. The trouble is when it's dark we cannot see and understand what's around us, and that uncertainty breeds fear, defensiveness and anger. So what is it then about the dark night that could be understood as sacred? Maybe it's about a revelation of God. Within Icon painting black is the first colour applied and often some black remains in the final picture. For God reveals himself out of the darkness. When all our self help devices are of no use it is then that we see God's presence most clearly.

I have been deeply moved recently by the two programmes on the BBC about the partition of India and descendants of those affected returning to try and understand what happened. Stories from all sides were told; all contained horror and suffering. The wonderful thing now is that those who experienced it first hand could talk to the children of the other side with honesty, care and humility; the children themselves accepting blessings from their ancestors' enemies. Such grace and forgiveness was truly atoning given the stories told. The one common thing that seemed to help was the shared pain. Within that there was another shared concept, which was to give it all to God because it was too big, too complicated, and too painful to wipe away. Here maybe was the "Dark sacred night - when the nightmares were just too awful, there in the midst and the future God enabled not a forgetting but and acknowledgement of what happened and an ability to live differently in the future. I pray none of us shall have to face such horrors in the future but it is good to know God is also there in the darkness waiting to enabling us.

Blessings Michael
